C 114 /2 cont./ outside of the Toba, whom I met only in passing, I got to know on this journey the Chiriguano and the Izozó, who, like the former, speak a dialect of the Guaraní language; the Tapieté, Churupí, Mataco, and Chorote. All of these Indian tribes are not unknown in ethnological literature. On Chiriguano history we are oriented through old documents from even the first years of the Spanish conquest, and we owe to the Franciscan missionaries, who have taught among them for a long time, quite important ethnological publications. The Churupí have been studied minutely under the name Ashluslay by Erland Nordenskiöld, and the Oblates of Immaculate Mary in Esteros and Lake Escalante are striving intensively to make ethnological investigations. I have proposed to deal with all of these tribes systematically. This survey will be made on the basis of the results of my journey, and I begin in this first publication with the Chiriguano and Izozó.

General Information

C Cc 174 361 As I said in the introduction to this work, I first met the Chiriguano in Machareti and the Izozó in the area around the fort of Toledo and in the fort "15 de Agosto," several kilometers from the former two.

C 361 [632] [797] Figure 1 presents a view of Machareti, a Chiriguano town created in its present form by the Franciscan mission. When the Paraguayan army retook Machareti, it had already been abandoned by the Padres, and now a Chiriguano, in the role of commissioner /comisario/, is the chief of the town, there also being a few caciques. The houses, more or less in the form of modern ranchos (cf. Figs. 14 and 15 /see p.40 /), are on both sides of wide streets which run parallel and at right angles, as in most of the towns of the former Spanish colonies. When I was present in Machareti, there was great need /3/ among these Indians because of the severe drought which had ruined their plantings, which were some distance from the town. At the side of the ranchos are often found deposits which were structures of native houses built on sticks. Although [643] of Condorillo, we do not have any evidence as to whether this whole parcialidad was under the chieftainship of a great cacique. We only know that the town of Saigpuru was one of the most important and that it was the most feared by its enemies and that its inhabitants were defeated in the year 1779 by Don Tomás Leso (? 4).

631 According to the reports written by the Governor of Santa Cruz,
632 Don Lorenzo Suárez de Figueroa, the Province of "Yvytupue," that 643 is, the region governed by the great cacique Vitupuera, was made
103 up of five large subdivisions. As can be assumed from the report cited, these subdivisions were in part made up of one town and in part of several towns and were, with the exception of one, governed by several caciques. Thus there is mentioned in the first place the subdivision "Taquirán and Caracará," probably meaning the towns which bear these names. As the caciques of this first subdivision, three are mentioned; thus the number of caciques does not correspond to the number of towns. Thus, we are not here dealing with a community which was established exclusively on a territorial basis. /84/ For the second subdivision three names are mentioned, Aguapea, Naipea, and Traibi. Thus it was probably made up of three towns. In this subdivision the number of towns, three, corresponds to the number of caciques. The third subdivision is called Tamboré. Thus it can be presumed that it consisted of but one town, and there is also mentioned but one cacique. The fourth subdivision is called Tendy, and three caciques of it are mentioned. It is stated that one of these caciques, called Aboqué, was the son of the cacique Tendy, thus of that cacique who gave his name to that subdivision. Of the fifth subdivision, Ayaguá or Cayaguá, as many as four caciques are mentioned (? 5).
